The Minister for Health and Ageing, Nicola Roxon, announced that 33 local governments around the country will receive funding to run programs that will encourage and support people to adopt and sustain healthier lifestyles.

Each local government will receive a grant of more than $700,000 as part of the Gillard Government’s $72 million Healthy Communities Initiative, which aims to support local governments to promote healthy lifestyles in the community.

“We want to keep Australians well and out of hospital, and programs like Healthy Communities provide practical support to people looking to make a healthy change,” Minister Roxon said.

“Local governments are introducing innovative physical activity and healthy eating programs in their communities that have been proven to make a real difference.”

“We know that preventive health measures work, that’s why we are encouraging people to adopt healthier lifestyles and combat obesity.”

The 33 projects will receive a total of $23 million under phase two of the Healthy Communities grants round. The grants are mostly in regional, rural and remote areas.

“Eighty per cent of the recommended local government areas have combined overweight and obesity rates above the national average and experience significant social and economic disadvantage so we are targeting this funding where it’s needed most.” Ms Roxon said.

“These projects will focus on at-risk populations, including Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islanders, culturally and linguistically diverse communities, new wave migrants and those living with disabilities.”

There will be 8 projects in New South Wales, 7 in Victoria and Queensland, 4 in Western Australia and South Australia, 2 in the Northern Territory and 1 in Tasmania.

10,000 students enroll under 'Come and Play' scheme

Ajay Maken, Indian minister of sports stated on May 17 that 10,000 students have registered under the government’s “Come and Play” scheme.

Minister Ajay Maken said that the largest number of students enrolled for cricket with 2,400 entries, followed by football (1498), Swimming (1000) and Athletics (924).

“In this scheme, our aim is to bring the children to the sports fields. After the summer vacation is over, we are trying to work out a few models where we can tie up these stadia with the schools, so that these stadia can be utilised properly,” he said.

Asked whether the number of cricket pitches offered all over Delhi under this scheme is less, considering the popularity of the game, Maken said, “For cricket we have provided nine pitches in the National stadium itself. We also have place at Vinay Marg and Jawaharlal Nehru Stadium. If needed, we can work out more plans.

“But for cricket, there are a lot of academies and facilities available all over Delhi. We want to emphasise on those sports where there are not much facilities available. I am happy that about 350 students have enrolled for hockey and basketball. Even volleyball has got good response.”

Insisting that the government’s intention is to utilise the infrastructure built during last year’s Commonwealth Games, he said the aim is to broad base sports in the Capital and in the nearby areas.

“Actually the aim is to make use of the infrastructure and broad base sports in Delhi and nearby cities. Secondly, we want to create Centre of Excellence in each of these stadia. And thirdly, we would want to conduct as many tournaments as possible in these stadia,” Maken said.
"SPORTS PLAN FOR ALL, BY ALL" IN SINGAPORE

Under a new initiative called ‘Vision 2030’, the Ministry of Community Development, Youth and Sports (MCYS) of Singapore and the Singapore Sports Council (SSC) will work with the Public-Private-People sectors to jointly develop proposals on how sport can best serve Singapore’s future needs.

Sports will be used as a strategy for individual development, community bonding and nation building in the next two decades. Vision 2030 will incorporate considerations of Singapore’s future challenges, including an ageing population; the pressure of living in an increasingly urban environment; higher expectations from individuals regarding the quality of life and a shrinking workforce with rising demands regarding job satisfaction.

Mr Chan Chun Sing, Acting Minister for Community Development, Youth & Sports, said, “Sports can be used as a strategy for individual character development to prepare our people for a more complex and competitive environment. It can be a way for busy people to find balance; for the silver generation to age actively; for youth to be engaged and learn life skills. On the community front, sports can be a powerful tool to bond communities across genders, races and religions. Sports can also be used to build national pride, unite and ignite our people as we move forward as one.”

A Vision 2030 Steering Committee, consisting of a cross section of society, has been formed to lead the discussion, consider proposals and recommend policy development based on the ideas and feedback generated by the sporting community and the public at large.
Recommended strategies in seven broad areas will be formulated by the committee:

I. Generation Z

ii. Balance to the Rhythm of an Urban Lifestyle

iii. Silver Generation

iv. Spirit of Singapore

v. Future Ready

vi. Futurescape

vii. Organising for Success

A website (www.Vision2030.sg) has been created for the public to share their ideas and feedback.

Said Mr Chan, “We want the public to participate actively in co-creating Vision 2030 because we believe everyone has a stake in it. This brings us to the next lap for sports - by everyone, for everyone, and with everyone. The process is just as important as the final product (sports plan), and we intend to continue this journey with all stakeholders even after the plan has been developed.”

“As the national agency overseeing sports development in Singapore, we are very excited with what will come out of the Vision 2030 exercise. With this new approach towards sports planning, we hope the true value of sports can be felt in all quarters of society and not just amongst sports enthusiasts,” said Singapore Sports Council Chief Executive Officer Lim Teck Yin.

The sports masterplan is expected to be ready in early 2012.

Third National Physique Survey Report of China Released

After studying the health of 231,925 adults for 19 months, the General Administration of Sport of China announced the results of its third national physique survey on September 2, 2011.

Even as more and more of the Chinese population is becoming overweight and elderly, residents’ health has improved steadily since 2005, according to the report.

Nearly 33 percent of Chinese adults between the ages of 20 and 59 are overweight, a figure that has increased by 3 percent since 2005. And 40 percent of adults between the ages of 60 and 69 are obese, a figure that is up 4.2 percent from the same year.

Meanwhile, a decline has been seen in the results from tests given to gauge a person’s ability to grip something or jump, indicating losses of strength.

Although some participants in the survey said they were worried by their obesity, the report said the Chinese have become healthier in the past five years, as indicated by their body shapes, organ functions and ability to perform aerobic exercises.

The number of people who meet national fitness criteria has increased by 1.7 percent since 2005, according to an analysis of data culled from China’s 31 provinces, autonomous regions and municipalities on the mainland.

“We are very happy to see there are more and more physically fit people in our country,” Tian Ye, director of the national fitness monitoring center, said at a news conference about the report.

“But we should also pay close attention to those, especially the elderly, who are still unfit or overweight. The fact that only a few figures have declined means our national fitness campaign still needs to be promoted on a larger scale.”
China’s national campaign to encourage physical fitness gained an impetus from the 2008 Beijing Olympic Games, said Sheng Zhiguo, Director-General of Sport for All Department of the General Administration of Sport of China.

“The report proved that things are going well under our current plan, and it will help us to find potential troubles,” Sheng said. “We will stick to the program and provide more advanced exercise guidance and services in the future.”
